CHAPTER IX—Continued.

Mrs. Moon was not at all disturbed. "Just like his poor father, my second son," said she, shaking the frilled cap again. "He was a wonderful boy for money, and never minded how he got it. Have they jailed Jerry?" she asked with great simplicity.

Conniston could hardly help smiling at the calm way in which she took the report of her grandson's wickedness. "No," his master turned him out and gave him another chance.

"Bless and preserve your dear lordship, Jerry won't take no chance, as I always said, being advised by the cards. It's the galleys that boy will come to, and may I not be here to see him dangling at the end of a rope, much as he may deserve it. Jerry's a bad'un, for sure, and takes after my old man's side of the family, several having been choked by the law for thieving and murdering and otherwise taking their enjoyment. Where is he now?"

"I don't know, Mrs. Moon. But if he comes here, don't you let him know that Mr. Grant—Dick gave Bernard a new name for the sake of concealment—is here."

"Grant?" echoed Mrs. Moon. "But he don't look Scotch?"

"I never saw what he is. You hold your tongue and make Victoria hold hers."

"Only Jerry can manager her," said Mrs. Moon, firmly, "not being strong enough for the pretty teasing cat. If your lordship would speak yourself."

"I'll see to it," interrupted Conniston, quickly. "I'm stopping here for the night, Mrs. Moon. Can you give me and Mr. Grant a good dinner?"

"I'll cook it myself, Victoria being fond of burning things and her pastery being lead for heaviness. The wine, your lordship knows."

"Is there any of that port left?" "Plenty, save what Jerry drank, he being fond of his glass."

"What! a boy of thirteen, Mrs. Moon?" said Conniston, seriously. "If you had stifled Jerry in the mud years ago it would have been better for him and for you."

Mrs. Moon blew a gigantic sigh. "True enough, your lordship, seeing as he'll occupy a place in the Chamber of Horrors, and me the one the Moon saw in London. Ah, well, some of his grandfather's people were hanged and—"

GEN. BAUGHMAN DEAD

End Comes Soon After Taking Dose of Medicine.

LEADER IN STATE POLITICS

Management of Chesapeake and Ohio Canal and Directorship in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad His Important Public Service—Strong Man in Democratic Conventions.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 30.—After an illness dating from August, 1906, Gen. Louis Victor Baughman died at his country home, Poplar Terrace, three miles west of Frederick, at 2:10 o'clock this morning.

At the time of his death he was surrounded by his wife, his only daughter, Mrs. Charles H. Conley, and his son, Col. E. Austin Baughman. He was sixty-one years old.

For the last year Gen. Baughman's health had gradually declined. His first illness began with a severe cold, which he contracted at Braddock Heights in 1905, where he addressed a large Democratic gathering. He was sick two months before his condition showed improvement, and it soon afterward became apparent that the improvement was only temporary. About two weeks ago, while at his stables, he again contracted a cold, and never afterward got out of his room. He suffered from acute nephritis.

Death Comes Suddenly.

While his family and intimate friends knew that he was gradually growing weaker, his death came suddenly. Ten minutes before he died he took medicine from his nurse, and remarked that he was having a good night. About two minutes before the end he was seized with a spell of heart failure and peacefully passed away.

Besides his immediate family, he is survived by two brothers—J. William Baughman, formerly reading clerk in the State senate, but now living a retired life near Frederick, and Charles H. Baughman, who, with his son, C. Francis Baughman, edits the Citizen.

Record as Canal Manager.

Other than his family, two things interested Gen. Baughman intensely—politics and his farm. His claim to fame is the official record of his presidency of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, where, during the period of two terms, he struggled to uphold the property so that it would be in a position to hold its own against the railroads. This was a hopeless undertaking, for Gen. Baughman contended with the trend of the times, which was toward steam as the means of getting products to market. He threw all his zeal and energy into the battle, and the fight he made was a good one.

Advocated Sale to B. &amp; O.

Looking up even bigger than this was his joint directorship with the late United States Senator Gorman in the Washington Branch of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad.

It was he, it is generally believed, who first became dissatisfied with the returns in stock dividends to the State and, jointly with Senator Gorman, submitted a report in which facts were set forth that resulted in legislative action that brought about the selling of the State's interest in the canal. Twice he was State controller, where his management of financial matters left no room for criticism.

Always a Graceful Loser.

Gen. Baughman's health began to fail him when his political future seemed the brightest. He had entertained for years an ambition to become governor of Maryland. In 1887 he went into the gubernatorial nominating convention with the support of a large body of delegates. E. E. Jackson, of Wisconsin County, had even a stronger following. Gen. Baughman gracefully stepped aside and used his influence in bringing about the nomination of Mr. Jackson, who was named by the convention.
